High school has impacted my life in so many ways. High School taught me so many things, from personal boundaries to creating a relationship with my education. It has been a special experience to have studied in two different schools. Aashley helped me in getting clarity about myself. It is here I learned how to make friends. And it is in schools, I learned I am not good with keeping in touch with people who I don't spend most of my time with. Studying in Aashley International School shaped my personality and helped me improve confidence levels. And I had a great mentor who supported me and shaped my personality throughout the 4 years I spent in Aashley. I've had my best and not so good days in school. But all these experiences taught me a lesson Aashley will always have a special place in my heart. I'm grateful to have had Veena ma'am and Gowda sir, who made me a part of their family and guided me throughout.

Gratitude to my school, where I embarked on my educational journey as part of the inaugural 10th-grade class. During those formative years, the educational landscape underwent significant changes, yet our school stood unwaveringly by our side. In the face of new patterns and syllabus, our institution provided immense support, ensuring we excelled in our assignments and exams. Our school's commitment went beyond the ordinary; we found ourselves studying late into the night within its walls, diligently completing assignments. The dedication of our teachers was unparalleled; they not only stayed with us during weekdays but even on Sundays, preparing us for exams and adapting to the evolving curriculum. This nurturing environment played a pivotal role in shaping my professional journey. Now employed in a reputable company, I owe much of my success to the resilience instilled in me by my school. The institution not only bolstered my academic foundation but also eradicated stage fear through a myriad of activities, fostering confidence crucial for my career in the dynamic field of IT. Our school was not merely an academic hub but a holistic learning ground, offering cultural activities to ease exam anxiety and sports to provide a necessary diversion and relaxation. These experiences, coupled with the unwavering support of my teachers, molded me into the confident individual I am today. With heartfelt appreciation, I reflect on the transformative years spent in my alma mater, a place that not only educated but empowered, and for that, I am eternally grateful.
